

COMMUNITY SERVICE OF UNDERGRADUATES

University of Iowa

Service is a significant part of the undergraduate experience for many UI students. In response to a recent campus-wide survey of all UI undergraduates, 56% indicated that they participated in volunteering or community service during the current academic year.

A subset of 2151 respondents (11% of degree-seeking undergraduates) received additional questions that asked for further details about their service experiences. Recipients of these questions were a randomly selected, representative cross-section of UI undergraduates. These students reported serving in the following locations.

Female students account for 2\3 of the students serving in their communities

Data Source: Responses are taken from the 2014 SERU Survey of all degree-seeking undergraduates at the University of Iowa. Questions on participation in community service were randomly assigned to 2151 survey respondents, representing 11% of degree-seeking undergraduates at UI. Respondents in this group identified activities, organizations, or community agencies where they served during the previous academic year. If more than one student identified serving at the same location, the location is listed only once.

For more information about the SERU project at UI, see <http://www.uiowa.edu/seru/>
